

Prints, and Bronze Sculptures to go on Sale

Eaton to Donate Original Painting to Cancer Society

Main Street Art in Trolley Square is sponsoring an event with the artists May 2 from 7 to 9 p.m. as a benefit for the American Cancer Society. Prints, originals and bronze sculptures will be on sale.

Valoy Eaton, Heber Valley painter, and Steve Stredbeck, sculpturer, will be present during these hours. A Valoy Eaton original has been donated by the artist, and the painting will be on sale that evening. Valoy has arranged for the limited edition printing of four of his paintings. The proceeds from these prints go to the American Cancer Society.

Mr. Stredbeck, known for his western bronze sculptures, will donate a percentage of the sale of his sculptures sold that evening to the American Cancer Society.

Kathy Wilson, well known Salt Lake City artist, has also donated a painting to raise money for the research, education and patient service programs of the American Cancer Society.

Main Street Art manager, Steve Hasler, is inviting those interested in art and supporters of the American Cancer Society to this special evening. "I am happy to support the American Cancer Society in this endeavor. Main Street Art will donate 15% of all merchandise sold to the American Cancer Society."

Heber City Resident Writes and Illustrates LDS Book

Carol Erickson, Heber City, a former layout artist who drew Saturday morning cartoons for national television, has now written and illustrated an LDS book, "The Kingdom Come," recently released by Covenant Recordings.

The story is a fun-loving account of a little boy in the pre-earth life, told from his own point of view. The search for a mother, with the help of his Heavenly Father, leads Jess from an unfulfilled spirit to a baby growing within his mother.

Erickson began her art career at Utah State University. She studied book illustration at the University of Utah and Salt Lake Community College, and received her degree in Illustration at Art Instruction Schools, Minneapolis, MN. She has studied under such well-known artists as Barbara Nechis, L'Dean Trueblood, Douglas Jordan, Valoy Eaton, and Erla Young.

Erickson illustrated "Without Reservation," by Kay Cox, in 1980 and drew the cartoons for XAM Productions in 1983. Since then, she has devoted all her spare time to creating the airbrush illustrations for "The Kingdom Come."

Erickson is the secretary for her husband, Lee, and son, Robert, in their Heber City veterinarian practice. Her two daughters, Laurie and Tammie, are following their mother and pursuing careers in art.

"The Kingdom Come" will be available in several local stores, or autographed copies may be purchased from Erickson at her home.
